Originatic to Release the Smart-Leaf™

Chicago, IL – January 1, 2009

Originatic LLC announced today, its upcoming release of the Smart-Leaf, an innovative, wall-mountable all-in-one computer. The Smart-Leaf will be released at the Consumer Electronic Show in Las Vegas on January 8, 2009.

At last year's CES, Originatic unveiled its prototype of the Smart-Leaf, followed by design enhancements and positive reaction from market testing. Smart-Leaf Oasis and Mountain models will be available for ordering in January with first shipments scheduled for March.

The Smart-Leaf features both wall and desk modes, an integrated, fold-out keyboard, and a flare for style. In the wall mode, the Smart-Leaf provides 'on the fly' access to information. Originatic incorporated a suite of features into the Smart-Leaf to maximize durability and ease of use, such as touch screen, scratch resistance, spill-proofing, TV tuner, and power lock, all packaged in a unitary form with a slim profile.

The Smart-Leaf was designed with an aim to make life and work easier for today's high-paced demands for connectivity in homes and businesses. Originatic's market testing indicates that the Smart-Leaf will resonate well with home users looking for convenient, 'out of the way' computer access in kitchens and other areas of the home. For businesses, the Smart-Leaf provides a cost-effective, space efficient alternative to traditional kiosks.

According to Reno Smith, Originatic's Chairman, "We have had a strong response to the Smart-Leaf from both consumers and businesses. The Smart-Leaf appeals to consumers because it provides computer access in high traffic areas, like the kitchen, without taking up counter space. The Smart-Leaf enables businesses to deliver solutions to customers and employees in places previously considered too crowded."
